The war cloud in Europe seems to be growing darker and darker. De Lesseps thinks that if England does not withdraw from Egypt she will have a war on her hands with France. The cordiality with which Blaine and his family were received at the White House, and the statement that Blaine means to keep on being neighborly, are something uncommon, though not out of place. It would be strange if such friendly relations should be cultivated as to lead jealous Democrats to charge Blaine with an All-Wise Providence has decreed his being a "power behind the throne."

In the exciting days of March, 1861, when President elect Abraham Lincoln was compelled to reach the Capital in disguise to prevent assassination, he was besieged by office-seekers on every hand until he was caused to exclusin, "I seem to be sitting in one end of a great temple importuned to let spartments, while the temple is fiercely burning at the other end."

If we remember correctly Henry Ward Beecher was one of the three silver tongued orators sent to deliver lectures in England to enlighten the people of that country upon the true issues between the North and South during the rebellion. Their mission was a success. The mass of the people of that country sympathized with the North, while the Government sympathired with and rendered sid to the South. Congress at its last session failed, for a wonder, to make any appropriation for rivers and harbors. It must require no small amount of moral courage to resist the horde of officeseekers who throng about the White House and press their claims upon the President at each change of Administration through the various channels in which he is to be reached. Just now President Cleveland finds an excellent shield in the Civil Service Reform law-It is recorded upon the Statutes and it is his sworn duty to see that it is obeyed. The roller skate dates its origin from 1861, when a New York furniture deale named Plympton invented it and procured patent on it for 17 years. Two years ago last May the patent on the first skate expired, and since then manufactories have been started up in every part of the Union, Richmond, Indiana, alone having 13. St. John and Saints vs. Republicans and Blaine.

These saints ought not to slander the Republicans because they belong to the same family. Blaine would have held the people under a loyal government, While the saints were fighting the whisky rings, Blaine would have put down all mobs and seen fair play. A general could not be a partisan. He must direct the movements of the whole army. The boys must fight according to military tactics. The whisky ramparts must be carried by the shell and shot of logic. The temperance army must fight it out on this line if it takes all summer. Blaine was nominated to rule over the whole country. No man could be elected to this office who would run to the polls or stick his head out of the cars or go out on the platform of the cars or go out on the platform every time he saw a group of saints, to express his temperance sentiments. A candidate for the Presidency ought not to be a temperance lecturer or a sectarian preacher. It might do for Beecher to put in a plea for free lovers, and for Burchard to cry out, "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion," and for St. John to go into a group of saints crying out, "Look here all yet saints, I am the personification of the temperance idea." But if St. John had had the most distant idea of an election he would have had the discretion and the discretion and the fides of discretion and decency of any other available candidate. St. John has the full and inalienable right to do just as he pleases. He has his own is Blaine. Neither once of the total powers and decency of any other available candidates. St. John has the full and inalienable right to do just as he pleases. He has his own is Blaine. Neither once or the other ought to be almostred. Blaine, previous to his nomination, had done enough to convince the American people that the wax wholly in favor of temperance. He had favored the American people that the wax wholly in favor of temperance. He had favored the American people that the wax wholly in favor of temperance. He had favored while the whisky traffic. "In the administration of a government pledged to do equal and exact justice to all men there should be no pretext for anxiety touching the protection of the freedmen in their rights, or their security in the enjoyment of their privileges under the constitution and its amendments. All discussions as to their fitness for the position accorded to them as American citizens is idle and unprofitable, except as it auggests the necessity for their improvement. The fact that they are citizens entities them to all the rights due to that relation and charges them with all its duties, obligations and responsibilities.

Now we desire to see his party step forward upon the same plane of equal rights as its Isader, and accord to the Negro the rights of a freeman and an American citizen that he is entitled to.
